Ireland's historians believe their country to be the birthplace of whiskey. The resources for creating whiskey are widely available (barley), crystalline spring water and an alcoholic beverage tradition dating back to the 6th century when Christian monks brewed primitive beers from wheat. Folklore tells us that distilling goes back 1000 years and it may be plausible since whiskey really is nothing more than distilled beer.

SIX DEGREES OF PREPARATION

GUINNESS® Draught is best served at 6°C (that's 42.8°F), with the legendary two-part pour. First, tilt the glass to 45 degrees and carefully pour until three quarters full. Then place the glass on the bar counter and leave to settle. Once the surge has settled, fill the glass to the brim. It takes about 119.5 seconds to pour the perfect pint. But don't fret. It's worth the wait.
